Helping Congregations Face the Coronavirus...

Common Sense Practices to Safeguard Congregations

Amid the flurry of news stories and fears of further outbreaks of COVID-19, churches face the dilemma of being the churches God has always believed we can be, providing essential spiritual guidance and reaching out to help our communities, while finding ways to reinforce our care and nurture of our congregations. The virus is spreading and we must make common sense decisions to be able to do be the church we are called to be. The Presbyterian Mission Agency has issued some guidelines for pastors and sessions that might help provide a safer worship experience. The full document of this pastoral statement, "Coronavirus: Faith Not Fear", is available at www.presbyterianmission.org/story/faith-not-fear-2/ and includes an additional link for heightened procedures should we reach a Pandemic 6 status.

- Being aware and cautious, caring for ourselves as we protect one another, include tips like not sharing communion with a common cup or loaf. Communion servers dropping bread into the open palms of the participants, and with elements prepared and covered until serving still preserve this precious Sacrament even in these difficult times.
- Passing the peace of Christ is important to many of us, but there are some new ways we might do that. Perhaps we can adopt the time honored practice of bowing as show of love and respect as we say, "Peace of Christ" to our siblings in the congregation. Sharing a genuine smile and greeting with peace, instead of a hug or a handshake, might even be

Prayer for Today...

*Make a joyful noise...,
all the earth.
(Psalm 100:1)*

Lots of noise, Lord,
a small measure "joyful"
a ton fearful, complaining,
worried about illness
or the market.
Yet IRS workers remain civil
in workplaces,
neighbors ask the old
if they can grocery shop
for them.

more caring during this challenging time. Some churches are adopting the fist-bump or the elbow-bump as well.

- Worshippers are always encouraged to participate in worship according to their comfort, conscience, and condition, and while we always want people in worship, we must be careful not to make judgements upon those who are not comfortable. We should lift them up in special prayer and encourage that they might spend that hour with scripture and prayer for the congregation and all of humankind who are navigating this challenge together. If you are unable to come to worship, stay in touch through prayer circles, social media, or telephone calls. If you are a church that has live-streaming capabilities, worship with the congregation from the safety and comfort of your home, but do not let self-quarantining result in total isolation from friends.
- If you have room in your sanctuary, and many of us do, alternate rows and spread out to have a 3 foot distance between you and the next person. Make sure your church has plenty of tissues and hand sanitizers. Especially follow regular hand washing with a healthy dose of sanitizer in addition. It is recommended that communion and all food be prepared using gloves and masks.
- And be especially careful of those most at risk. Our youngest children are generally still developing good hygiene practices. Seize this opportunity to have teaching moments. The elderly or those with compromised immunity through illness, or chemotherapy and radiation, need our special care in our interactions.

As we work through this, be practical but not filled with panic. Watching the news could make you fearful, but remember that the God who brought the people through the wilderness of the Exodus still protects and nurtures each of us. Let the Spirit be your guide in this time, showing you a light that the darkness cannot extinguish. We will get through, with God's help.

Worshipping in Alternative Ways During Crises...

By Reverend David Gambrell

David Gambrell, PCUSA Associate for Worship, offers suggestions of ways to continue worship practices despite the challenges in a time of health crises. Gatherings of people in hospitals and nursing facilities can worship via live streaming. The sacraments should be suspended since they are meant to be done with the physical presence of the elements in worship. Encouraging interaction from the congregation, through comments, posts, blogs, likes and shares, will help enrich the worship services. The use of Daily Prayer services are good options for these occasions and short sermon messages will still bring meaning to the worship for those who are unable to physically attend. Tithes and offerings can be achieved through on-line giving. Most websites can easily set this up and help for this, or information can be found by contacting the Presbyterian Foundation regarding on-line giving. With these alternatives, those unable to be physically present may still, for the short term, be nurtured as part of the worship experience.
